Five Cs of What Interviewers are Looking for in New Hires

The five C's of interviewing is what interviewers are looking for when they engage in a conversation with a potential candidate. These would indicate that not only the personal qualities of the person are sufficient for the position, but also their skills and lived experience.

This is what interviewers look out for:

1. Character: Uncover the essence of who you are! Showcase integrity, honesty, and a strong moral compass. Let your true character shine in every response.
2. Competence: Prove you've got the skills and knowledge for the job! Highlight your expertise and experiences that make you the perfect fit for the role
3. Chemistry: Connect on a personal level! Demonstrate your ability to collaborate and build positive relationships. Your interpersonal skills matter just as much as your technical know-how.
4. Culture: Embrace the vibe of the organization! Show how your values align with the company's mission. Be a cultural fit and contribute to the positive work environment.
5. Capacity: Demonstrate your ability to handle the workload! Showcase your adaptability, resilience, and enthusiasm for taking on new challenges.

Which one do you think you're strongest at? Comment below!
